Nazis Aim Drives at Sevastopol and Kharkov

By the Associated Press

Marshal Fedor Von Bock's armies were reported attacking Friday in a great new battle around Kharkov amid indication that the two hour may be near for the long heralded German summer offensive.

A bulletin from Adolf Hitler's field headquarters said German troops east of Kharkov had carried out successful attacks which were increasing in volume.

Terse Soviet command acknowledged that the new German drive was making headway against Russian resistance.

On the Crimean front Soviet dispatches reported the defenders of long besieged Sevastopol, key Black Sea naval base, were counter attacking improving some of their positions and bloodily repulsing fresh German assaults.

At Red Star, however, conceded that the situation was extremely tense.

A Berlin broadcast said attacks on Sevastopol and east of Kharkov were preludes to Adolf Hitler's coming great offensive and indicated the big push would start once Sevastopol had been reduced and German lines straightened out below Kharkov.

4-Engined Plane Falls in Water, Two Are Saved

Sarasota, Fla. — (AP) — Eight army fliers were killed and two injured early Friday when a four-engined bomber crashed into Sarasota Bay.

Major Gardiner Fiske, Sarasota base officer, said the ship cleared the runway on a pre-dawn training flight and had gone about a mile when it went out of control.

The plane landed on its back in 1 1/2 feet of water about 200 feet from shore and two of the crew were pulled from the wreckage with only minor injuries.

The dead included:

Second Lieutenant James H. Butler of Hope, Ark.

Well Known Here

Second Lieutenant James Herring Butler, 28, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Butler of near Hope, was killed Friday in an airplane accident in Florida, his family was notified by the War Department.

Lt. Butler graduated from Hope High School in 1936 and attended Henderson college. He joined the Army Air corps in August 1941 and was commissioned as a second lieutenant March 16, 1942, at Matthews Field, Calif.

He was stationed at Sarasota, Florida, and presumably the accident occurred near that base. Complete details of the accident are not known.

Although funeral arrangements are incomplete relatives said the body would be returned to Hope sometime Saturday.

Surviving besides his parents are three sisters, Miss Cleo Butler of Idabel, Okla., Mrs. Malcolm Madison of Texarkana and Mrs. Thomas Brumfield of Texarkana, three brothers, Reul Butler of Osceola, Ark., and Jack and Charles Butler of Hope.

Co-Operation for Victory

There are far too many exceptions, of course. But in general it can truthfully be said that the emergency of this war is bringing about almost unbelievable unity on the American labor front.

Some employers still are trying to profit exorbitantly out of their workmen. Some unions still are seeking to get the last good egg even if it kills the goose. Over all, however, there is growing a realization that capital and labor are sailing stormy seas in the same open boat, and should devote themselves wholeheartedly to the common cause.

When Dohrnald Nelson first proposed labor-management committees to spread war production, he aroused a storm of protest liberally sprinkled with personal abuse.

Employers saw in the plan a covert scheme by which the labor unions would be enabled to muscle in on management functions. They would have none of such utopian dreams.

A few did try the idea, then more, until now such committees are functioning in more than 800 war plants.

There have been abuse here and there. On the whole, both sides have proven so sincere that labor-management committees no longer can be considered radical, experimental or essentially debatable. They have succeeded.

Mill & Factory, a trade publication, canvassed 88 plants chosen at random, of all sizes and with wide geographical distribution and diversity of product. Seventy-seven reported that labor has not attempted to encroach on management functions. Eighty-four reported that the unions have not tried to use the committees for bargaining purposes. Sixty-five said that labor has used the committees in a sincere effort to increase production.

The replies are as encouraging as the facts. Many who assumed that the unions would prove true employers frank enough to find the unions full credit.

It develops, for the benefit of those who doubted, that workers and managements can co-operate in the common interest. We must assume that in most instances such collaboration will continue until the war has been won.

Is it too much to hope that the habit of meeting on common ground, of exchanging views amicably, of subordinating selfish interests to the common welfare, in short, of functioning as reasonable human beings—can be carried over into peace time?

Italians Claim 1,000 Killed at Libya Post

Bitter Battle Raging in Libya

Cairo — (AP) — British tanks are locked in a bitter battle with German armored forces about 30 miles southeast of Tobruk Friday in an effort to block the drive of three strong columns which turned north-east toward that objective after forcing the Free French out of Bir Hacheim, southern anchor of the British line.

Harmap, 8 miles south of the desert track crossing of Knightsbridge around which has centered much of the desert battling in this German offensive was the general scene of the engagement.

Speculation on Agreement of Allied Powers

By the Associated Press

Allied capitals rang with speculation Friday on prospects of three vast and perhaps imminent developments aimed at final downfall of Germany and Japan and the shaping of a new world at peace.

While Berlin sounded a new threat to Hitler's coming great offensive, the United Nations envisaged:

1. Creation of a second front on Europe in 1942.

2. Possible Russian attack on Japan.

3. The opening of Soviet air bases to American bombers for attack on Japan.

In Washington congressional quarters expressed belief that the full understanding reached between President Roosevelt and Russia's foreign commissar Molotov might open bases at Vladivostok to U. S. bomber squadrons.

"If Russia gives us the right to use bases I feel confident that the U. S. could bring Japan to her knees in short time," declared Senator Wheeler, (D. Mont.).

Others voiced the conviction that nothing in the mutual aid agreement between the U. S. and Russia would precipitate the Russians into war with Japan while they were so heavily engaged with Hitler's armies in the west.

Sorely pressed China watched anxiously with the Chinese press calling on Russia to strike at Japan now. "In Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek wartime capital at Chungking the newspaper Ta Kung Pao declared:

"Russia should realize that Japanese attacks on the Aleutians (off Alaska) was a direct threat to Soviet Kamchatka and Siberia. Can Russia stand aside and watch wild-fire spread to her very gates? She must do something and do it quickly."

Informed quarters at Pearl Harbor suggested that Japanese thrusts at Alaska and Midway were the prelude to an attack on Russia.

AAA Payments Aid Farmers

Farmers of Hempstead County used $53,415.00 of Triple-A payments to assist them in carrying out recommended soil - building practices under the 1940 Agricultural Conservation Program, according to E. N. Martindale, Chairman of the County Triple-A Committee. In addition to this amount, Martindale said, an additional $20,269.00 was set aside to assist farmers of the county in this work but it was unused.

Despite the fact that money was available to assist them in this conservation work, there were 618 farm operators in the county who did not take advantage of the opportunity, Martindale continued.

A total of 29 soil-building practices were included in the 1941 Triple-A program in Arkansas for which assistance was furnished by the government in the form of money to aid in doing the work. These practices included the application of conservation materials such as triple superphosphate and ground limestone which were furnished by the government at no cash outlay to the farmer with the cost being deducted from his conservation check. There were 523,800 pounds of triple superphosphate use don 582 farms and 5 tons of ground limestone used on 1 farm in the county.

Conservation materials and services to be furnished farmers this year under the Triple-A program will include limestone, superphosphate, winter legume seed and terracing service. When the need arises other seeds or materials can be made available if it is found practicable to do so.

Assistance payments will be made for the application of conservation materials to or in connection with a full seeding of perennial grasses, winter legumes, ryegrass or permanent pasture. Practices include application of 48 pounds of available potash which may be supplied in 300 pounds of 16-per cent superphosphate, 240 pounds of 20 per cent superphosphate or 100 pounds of triple superphosphate.

Ship Is Sunk in Coral Sea Fight Off Australia

Washington — (AP) — The smashing naval victory of the Coral Sea battle cost the United States the 33,000-ton aircraft carrier Lexington, the Navy disclosed Friday in a summary which told of far vaster damage to Japan's armada menacing Australia.

The Lexington sank with relative slight loss of life in a post-battle explosion which spread fire which the crew was unable to put out, after they had fought heroically for more than 5 hours to save their ship.

From March 10 through May 8 the entire campaign cost Japan more than 15 ships sunk, two probably sunk and 20 damaged.

The U. S. lost besides the Lexington, only the Tanker Neosha, and the destroyer Sims, and a large part of their personnel was saved.

On May 8 the Lexington made the main objective of the Japanese aircraft which attacked while her own planes were absent.

Heroic Battle

Attacks were the last action in the Coral Sea battle the navy announced and gave this description of the heroic fight the crew put up to save the great ship:

"The crew of the Lexington succeeded in putting out the fires and recovering her aircraft. Several hours after the battle while steaming at 20 knots a terrific internal explosion rocked the carrier causing serious fires to break out in many parts of the ship."

"Destroyers were sent alongside to assist. The wounded were transferred from the burning carrier to the destroyers."

"Finally with all machinery disabled the ship stopped and with flames enveloping nearly her entire length it became apparent that any further attempt to save her was futile and the captain ordered the crew to 'abandon ship.'"

92% of Crew Saved

The Lexington's normal complement was 2,300 men. The Navy said 92 per cent of the personnel on board was rescued by officials commented that obviously the planes were lost without estimating the number.

The enemy suffered loss of more than 100 airplanes, the Navy said.

The Coral Sea fight was the first naval battle in history in which all damage was inflicted by aircraft. The American forces broke up a big-scale Japanese thrust aimed either at the key Allied outpost of Port Moresby, New Guinea or at invasion of Australia.

Hamby-Wathen Wedding

A wedding of prominent social interest in Arkansas and Texas is that of Miss Mary Isabelle Hamby, daughter of Mayor and Mrs. Randolph P. Hamby, of Prescott, and John Love Wathen, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Wathen of Dallas, which was performed at the Post Chapel, Camp Crowder, Missouri, at 6 o'clock on the evening of June 6, with Chaplain A. G. Belles officiating.

The chapel was decorated with foris, lilies and other white flowers, and tall white candles in graduating candleabra cast a soft glow over the chapel.

Preceding the ceremony, Private Maurice Chelker, soloist, sang "O Promise Me," "At Dawning" and "Because." Mrs. J. A. Jenkins, organist, accompanied him. The traditional Lohengrin and Mendelssohn wedding marches were used. The bride walked to the altar with her father, who gave her in marriage. She was beautiful in a white silk net gown, fashioned along simple lines with flatter basque waist, puffed sleeves and full skirt ending in a long train. The square neck was caught on each shoulder by a cluster of pearls. Her veil of illusion fell from a halo cup held in place by orange blossoms and she carried a shower of white lilies, carnations and baby breath. The bride also wore a cameo bracelet that had been worn by five generations of brides of her mother's family; she also wore a strand of pearls, a gift of the groom, and carried a point lace handkerchief that had been carried by her mother, the former Irene Royston, at her wedding.

Miss Irene Hamby, sister of the bride, served as maid of honor. She wore a gown of blue baroque, fashioned with a fitted basque waist, a bouffant skirt, and puffed sleeves. The square neck and sleeves were edged with small plated ruffles. She wore a matching blue hat trimmed with shasta daisies and carried an arm bouquet of shasta daisies and carnations tied with long yellow and blue streamers. Mr. Frank Wathen of Dallas served his brother as best man.

The bride's parents entertained with a reception at the Camp Crowder Guest House following the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Wathen

Fathers of United States

By NEA Service

Boston—America is going to have its first wartime celebration of National Father's Day on June 21. And if anybody is looking for an appropriate and inspiring hero for the occasion, he couldn't find a better one than Paul Revere. For the Boston patriot, besides winning the steeplechase to Concord (via Lexington) on a borrowed horse, gave George Washington some brisk competition for the title of Father of His Country.

Not only was Paul Revere one of the fathers of the American Revolution. He was also the father of Deborah, Paul, Sarah, Mary, Frances, Mary (II), Elizabeth, Hannah, Joshua, John, Joseph, Lucy, Harriet, John (II), Maria and John (III). So it can't be said he wasn't as enthusiastic a parent as he was a patriot, even if he did run a little short of names toward the end.

He Was a Busy Man

It seems amazing today—as it probably did in Revolutionary Boston—that Revere could have found time for anything except feeding and clothing his children, and taking an occasional inventory. But his contribution to the cause of liberty didn't end with the country's first and most famous civilian defense job. He played an active part throughout the war, meanwhile keeping up with business enterprises almost as numerous as his progeny.

In fact, there was probably a connection. He seemed to have more time when he grew more successful, and as he had more children he had to increase his business to remain successful. Apparently it was a pleasant round rather than a vicious circle. He lived to be 83, and his estate of 20,000 early 19th century dollars was not, as the saying is, hay.

First Revere was a great silversmith, to which he added a sideline of copper engraving. Then he went in for dentistry. Branching out, he bought a hardware establishment and stocked it with as many varied items as a chain drugstore.

One Company is Still Going

He helped organize America's first mutual fire insurance company. He bought a foundry that turned out bells and cannon. It's still doing business today as Revere Copper and Brass, Inc., producing material for the present war.

In a life filled with 64 assorted businesses and a hand in a revolution, Paul Revere seems to have had only one serious problem. That was what to do with his leisure time. So he took up cartooning as a hobby.

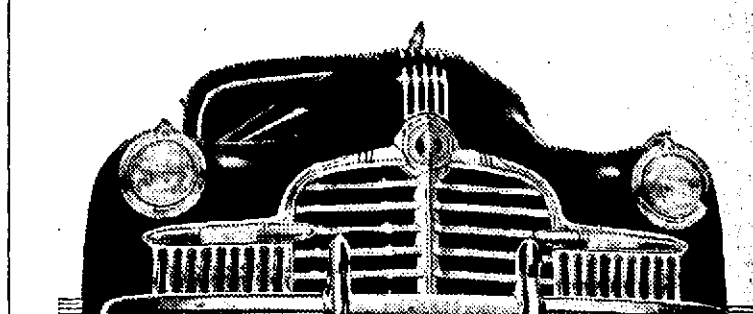

Altogether quite a remarkable and admirable gentleman, Mr. Revere, and a fit hero for 1942 Father's Day—especially since this year's slogan: "Honor a Great American—Your Dad," might have been coined for the Revere kids.

The Burma Road was tentatively surveyed more than a century ago but was not opened until 1939, according to the Department of Commerce.

HOW TO BUY A NEW* 1942 PONTIAC

In addition to physicians, nurses, ministers and those in certain civic services, all persons directly or indirectly connected with the war's prosecution are eligible to purchase a new car. This regulation has behind it the patriotic purpose of enabling these persons to replace worn and inefficient cars with modern, economical transportation. If you are in any way connected with a war activity—or if your present car should be replaced—come in. We will help you determine whether you are eligible, and then help you get a "certificate of purchase" on a new Pontiac.

CHOOSING A CAR today compels you to look ahead, because it may have to serve you for a long, long time. If ever a car was "tailor made" for these conditions, it's the 1942 Pontiac. Thanks to fine engineering, Pontiac can be expected to deliver miles of economical, trouble-free operation, plus remarkable tire conservation. Pontiac is still priced just above the lowest—and can be purchased on convenient monthly terms.

Tracy and Hepburn Brilliant Team in the 'Woman of the Year'

Saenger Show Sunday Has Much Promise

It was inevitable, that Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn should some day appear on the screen together, and the union of these two Academy Award winners in "Woman of the Year," which opens Sunday at the Saenger theater, provides the screen with a completely refreshing and engrossing photoplay.

With Tracy in a made-to-order role as a newspaper sports writer and the sparkling Miss Hepburn as a sleek and sophisticated columnist on international affairs, the story unfolds the meeting of these two opposite personalities, their marriage, and the clash of temperament between the man who wants his wife to preoccupy herself with her home life and the woman who, named "America's Outstanding Woman of the Year," believes she can combine marriage and a career.

Tracy, in the role of the sports writer, again offers that combination of naturalness and dramatic power which has made him one of the greatest performers of the screen, while Miss Hepburn has never been more striking than in her present portrayal as a woman who knows her diplomats from the ground up but who is completely ignorant of the popular American pastime of baseball.

Topping an excellent supporting cast is Fay Bainter, an Academy Award winner in her own right, in the role of Miss Hepburn's aunt who aids in patching up her turbulent niece's marriage when it seems about to go on the rocks. Reginald Owen is a convincing newspaper managing editor, and lesser roles are ably filled by Minnie Watson, William Bendix, Gladys Blake, Dan Tobin, Roscoe Karns and William Tamen.

George Stevens, who directed Miss Hepburn in "Alice Adams" some years ago has given the new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture swift and discerning direction. "Woman of the Year" may be safely termed one of the most captivating films of the year!

SPORTING BLOOD

By HARRY HARRISON KROLL

THE STORY: Hunter Dent, manager of Strickland Ballard's farm, has bet his wealthy employer his coming year's salary that Ballard will return the prize horse and new strain of corn which he has recently stolen before the year's end. Hunter thinks he has a weapon to win his bet when Ballard's disgruntled son, Junior, is found by Hunter trying to steal a blood-stained envelope from the local bank containing $17,000. Hunter puts the money in a wall safe, carries Junior to his room. Ballard's daughter, Bella, shows Hunter a newspaper account of an attack on a bank messenger the night before. The messenger was wounded and robbed of $17,000. Bella wonders Hunter she can solve the mystery. If he'll tell her whether Junior came to his room the night before.

JUNIOR—IN TROUBLE

CHAPTER III

SOMETHING happened to Hunter Dent in that kiss. He held the slim form of Red Ballard close to him. He put his mouth on hers, felt its softness, a tenderness, that had no place in a wager. For a moment he dared believe there was something more here than had appeared on the surface. He murmured, "You used to be such a charming brat, Red. So trusting, so—well, just everything."

Her voice was practical. "Now the clew. Come on, come on—the clew."

Hunter took on a vague air, for he was trying to think his way through a sudden problem. "Ah, yes—the clew. H-mmmm. What was your question?"

"You know very well that I asked you if my brother Junior Ballard was here last night! Was he or wasn't he?"

Would Junior Ballard have wanted his sister to know? Would it not be wiser for the moment to protect Junior; for Hunter could not guess the possible complications the presence of $17,000 of funds from the First National Bank would bring about; he perhaps would be protecting the girl as much as young Ballard by not talking too much. There was a way out.

"Why, Junior this moment is in his room."

She seemed surprised. "His room! Wasn't he—"

"I suppose after the party and a big night he came home and crawled into bed. Fact is I saw him go to his room and go to bed."

Suddenly she started away. Hunter followed half across the rear lawn. He hardly knew why he felt this way—not wanting her to go to find Junior. Just then ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

We do not know the exact date at which these words in the Gospel of Mark were written, but it was near the time of the very beginning of Christianity. We live in a world so accustomed to Christian institutions and so aware of the spread of Christianity to almost every part of the world that it is almost impossible for us to visualize the conditions under which these words were written. The events that have become the most important in all history for us were then unknown or unimportant to the greater part of that ancient world. Christians were comparatively few, and were for the most part either despised or persecuted.

The growth of the early church was remarkable immediately following the fulfillment of the commission that Jesus gave to His 11 faithful apostles and the missionary labors of St. Paul and his associates, but even this remarkable growth was small in comparison with the vast number who had never heard of Christ. The religion of the Galilean seemed feeble and unimportant, with its groups meeting in homes, or in lonely outdoor places, or even in the hidden catacombs, in comparison with the elaborate temples of Grecian and Roman cities and the official and popular religions that they represented.

Yet, one must attempt to reproduce something of that picture to grasp in any way a conception of the true nature of Christianity and the largeness, boldness, and courage of Christian faith in its idea that the Gospel it professed could be a boon to all mankind, and that its power and blessings could be preached to every creature. Surely, human faith and vision never dared elsewhere to contemplate anything so stupendous! The Christian enterprise, thus initiated in the very beginnings, leaves one breathless in consideration of its immensity, even in comparison with the ambitious plans of those who have sought to bring all the world under their domain by military conquest.

The world of today seems in some measure to mock the grandeur of that faith as we see what have been professedly Christian nations in deadly combat, and practically the whole world involved in war and violence, with the disruption of such missionary enterprise and the entire withdrawal of our Christian missionaries from certain areas whether they had hitherto achieved much progress. But we must not be discouraged and we must guard against seeing world events in the false perspective of despair. As the boundaries of the world have enlarged and progress has developed, the powers of evil have increased along with the powers of good. The present crisis is wider, and perhaps deeper, but it is inherently no different from successive crisis in which powers of anti-Christian have sought unsuccessfully to overthrow the Christian Church and undo all that has been accomplished in the name of the Master.

The promise of God is still to the faithful, and it is as true today as it was in the dark hours when Jesus proclaimed it that the triumph of the Gospel is sure. When the world passes out of this period there was a blast of a motor horn out in front. Instead of entering the east wing of the big house, where young Ballard's room was located, Red, recognizing the horn, ran lightly by a footpath around. Hunter went to the corner of the house. The big blue roadster was familiar to him too.

THE young man at the wheel was Oliver Tisdale. He was brawny. He seemed disheveled. Something in his manner suggested great anxiety, and Hunter thought he detected a worried note in his voice when he called to Red. The girl ran up to him. She leaned on the rim of the car door. Hunter went quickly into the house.

He met Warwick, the butler, in the corridor. "The young master is in his room, isn't he, Warwick?"

"Why, yes, sir, Mr. Dent, I am quite sure of it. He would be still asleep, sir."

"Do you know what time he got in last night—this morning?"

He watched the man closely, for if no one had seen Hunter carry Junior in, the situation would be simple. "Well, the young master usually is in early in getting in. I heard him enter about 2:30 when I heard him enter. I didn't see him come in, but I was awake, sir, and noted the time."

"Who were here—could you say?"

"Why, yes, sir, I think I could name most of the guests. There were the twins—"

"The Ghibartos?"

"Yes, sir. And Mr. Tisdale, quite naturally."

"And Mr. Hankins Temple, sir; and the Misses Etta and Jane McDougal; Bill McKeever, and Mrs. Ballard's brother Neal—just the usual crowd, sir. I'd say none of the familiar group were missing, and there were no new faces."

Hunter told them over in his mind. The Ghibarto twins were sleek, handsome fellows, with the mystery of strangers; they were the sons of one of the master contractors at what was known in Middleton as the "Shell Plant." This was a huge ordnance manufacturing plant built by the government in its defense program about 40 miles south of Middleton. Hunter checked the rumor of scandal in the erection of the plant, and the gossip that the elder Ghibarto might be involved. He went no further than that in his thinking now. Hankins Temple was the son of Leland Temple, president of the First National Bank. He was a charming young fellow, whom Hunter really respected and liked. The McDougal girls were pretty young singers, who plugged

Hunter Dent straightened. He nodded to Warwick.

"You'd better call a doctor quick. You'd better telephone Mr. Ballard too. He and Mrs. Ballard are in town at their home. Get in touch with them immediately. Junior has been shot, and I think he is dead."

As Warwick hurried out Hunter bent to listen to Junior's heart, to make sure if the boy were dead or alive.

the Ballard Bitters over the local radio station. Their father, "Bugs" McDougal, was a stockholder in the medicine company. Bill McKeever was a noted football star. Neal Frazier was the lazy, good-looking brother of Strickland Ballard's youthful second wife. A kind of hanger-on of a wealthy kinsman's house. All estates have them as ornaments.

And, of course, young Tisdale, now talking to Red out front.

thought. All of them were unusual and individualistic. He could say this for all the Ballards: they were not snobs. There was still a democracy about their friendships not based on money values alone. To be sure almost all of the young friends of the house were from the holders in the Ballard company. But that was not the basis of the communion. Hunter, for instance, could have been a member of the group. He had neither money nor medicine stocks. But he was personable, well educated, an expert in his line, and an individual. These qualities would have given him an entrée on an equality with the rest. He had declined to use his advantage maybe out of jealousy. He didn't know. But it got back, always, to Red. Maybe he loved her and because he could not have her now he was enjoying a contrary tantrum.

The butler followed Hunter into Junior's room. Junior was lying in just about the same position Hunter had left him. But there was some change Hunter did not immediately understand. He moved closer, and suddenly drew back. He turned to look at Warwick. The butler's voice was hoarse with fear when he said, "What is it, sir? Is he—"

Hunter bent over Junior. He gently rolled the boy over. The face was as colorless as the bedsheet. The blood stains that Hunter had thought were from the scratch on Junior's arm seemed bigger. Hunter looked at a hole in the black coat. He unbuttoned Junior's shirt. Warwick hovered anxiously by.

Hunter Dent straightened. He nodded to Warwick.

of hate and violence, there will still be human needs with the power of the Gospel to meet them. We are more than ever aware that it is only the Christ who can satisfy the needs and longings of mankind, and it is true, as in the ancient day, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Note also, that the world that Jesus said He had overcome was a world of trial and tribulation, not unlike the world in which we are now living.
